In the case of Charles Kohn, who pleaded guilty to a charge of embezzlement, Justice Clabaugh today suspended sentence, and released the prisoner on his personal bonds. Kohn was charged with appropriating a small sum of money belonging to the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Company, by whom he was employed. Attorney William L. Ritterlich appeared for the accused, and made a plea for leniency on account of the prisoner's previous good character. Kohn's former employer also asked the court to extend clemency to the accused.

Justice Clabaugh, after giving the prisoner a severe lecture on the seriousness of the crime he had committed, and warning him if he was ever again brought before the court for another offense, the full penalty of the law would be imposed, released him on his personal recognizance.

LIABILITY OF EMPLOYERS.Dr. Honrich's Argument Before the Industrial Commission.

Dr. L. A. Honrich, of this city, testified before the Industrial Commission today concerning employers' liability, the incorporation of trades unions, and the condition of the clothing trades of New York. He recommended the incorporation of trades unions as a means of giving to the employees independence of action in making contracts with the employer. He was asked how a contract could be enforced against the corporation of the employees, to which he answered that in many cases the responsibility of the organization of workmen would be greater than that of the employer.

In proof of this he cited the clothing trades of New York city and showed that in many instances the contractor who stood between the employer and the people who did the work received payment for the work done, absconded with it and thus defrauded the workmen. Most of the organizations, however, he said, had some funds at their disposal. He thought he could frame a law which would be applicable to the incorporation of labor organizations and submit with his testimony.
